Subterfuge Graham Holt
In the not too distant future, in an age of scientific benefits, the world continues to turn and is not dominated by robots and machines but relies upon the skill and determination of individuals often facing the adversity of politics, that inevitable bedfellow of civilisation, when a submarine with its crew is destroyed. An ordinary man with a family and career in the Royal Navy leads his life, hopeful for advancement and personal happiness. The nameless captain attains his promotion with a crown of thorns as his superior Paul Corruthers endeavours to follow his own career path. As Captain of an ageing nuclear submarine, the ordinary man descends into a world of political expediency where a mission of surveillance to North Korea becomes a fight for survival. Unaware of the subterfuge and deceit of self-centred Paul Corruthers, he performs his duties to the best of his abilities until faced with the ultimate dilemma as a member of the armed forces in a deniable operation where his very existence is threatened in an underwater duel between two submarines. Ambiguity over the rules of engagement and grey areas of interpretation so beloved by politicians, ultimately cause the Captain to question his own self-worth. As a consequence, and following a show court martial, the Captain embarks upon a new career and is brought even closer, as a survey ship captain, to the politics and the totalitarian regime of North Korea.
