This is a standalone novel with no cliffhangers. Taija is beautiful and sassy. She has a mouthpiece that she ain't afraid to use, and when she has to, she knows her way around 'laying hands', on somebody. But there is much more to her. Abandoned by her mother, and subsequently given away by her grandmother, it's no wonder Taija has anger issues and fears of never being loved the right way. But then she meets Troy, an attentive and extremely attractive man who is ready to love her whole. Troy is all man. He is strong, yet soft at the same time-when it comes to Taija, that is. He knew when he first met her that he wanted her for himself, but her inability to trust interfered. Now that he has her, he doesn't plan to let her go.
