You say you will eat grass on his grave. A Christian eat grass! Whereby you now confess yourself to be a goose or an ass. But that's as much as to say, that my master should die before ye; Well, well, that's as God pleases; and I don't believe that's a true story; And so say I told you so, and you may go tell my master; what care I? Mary. And I don't care who knows it; 'tis all one to Every body knows that I love to tell truth and shame the devil: I am but a poor servant; but I think gentlefolks should be civil. Besides, you found fault with our victuals one day that you was here; the year: I remember it was on a Tuesday, of all days in And Saunders, the man, says you are always jesting and mocking. 'Mary,' said he, (one day as I was mending my master's stocking) 'My master is so fond of that minister that keeps the school--I thought my master a wise man, but that man makes him a fool.' Saunders, (said I) I would rather than a quart of ale He would come into our kitchen and I would pin a dishclout to his tail.' And now I must go and get Saunders to direct this letter, For I write but a sad scrawl; but my sister Marget she writes better. Well, but I must run and make the bed before my master comes from pray'rs; And see, now, it strikes ten, and I hear him coming up stairs: Whereof I could say more to your verses, if I could write written hand; And so I remain in a civil way, your servant to command, Mary.
